The UIA celebrates World Architecture Day
Created by the International Union of Architects (UIA) in 1985, World Architecture Day is celebrated annually on the first Monday of October in parallel with the United Nations’ World Habitat Day. The UIA Council chose the theme “Architecture for Resilient Communities” for this year’s World Architecture Day. With this theme, the UIA seeks to place particular emphasis on the capacity and responsibility of architecture to create viable community life and open an international discussion on the relationship between urban and rural areas in all countries.

Under the theme “Back to Balance: Architecture for everyone’s better life”, the 2029 Congress will invite participants to engage in a profound exploration of equilibrium in the context of our rapidly evolving world, and examine how the built environment can be designed in harmony with technology and society.

The Congress aspires to address the global anticipation of restoring balance in our world in three areas:

- Balance between Human and Human: Social Coherence
- Balance between Human and Nature: Environmentally Friendliness
- Balance between Human and Technology: Humanising the Technology
